

Vietnam Customs Duty 2012 Planning & Problem Solving

23 February, 2012, HCMC Legend HotelSaigon 2A-4A Ton Duc Thang Str., D.1, HCMC, Vietnam

Introduction

As the WTO's 150th member Vietnam has in recent years adopted the body of customs and tariff rules that are binding for all WTO members. This body of rules is extensive and complicated, even if we only regard those in relation to customs law. The valuation of imported goods for customs duty purposes, for example, is a matter regulated by the so-called GATT Customs Valuation Code. It is implemented in Vietnamese law by means of special regulations, as is the case with other WTO-related customs rules.

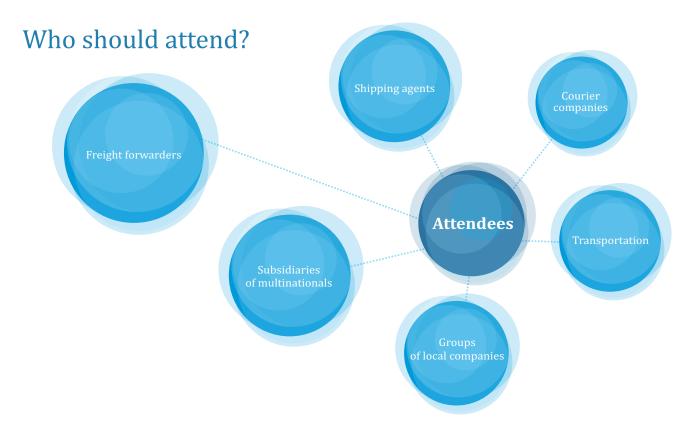

Another strong international influence on Vietnam's international trade policy is obviously the growing number of ASEAN Free Trade Agreement, "AFTA" provides in complete or almost complete exemptions in custom duty for a wide range of goods that originate from within the ASEAN countries. More and more goods can be made in ASEAN, even partially with raw materials from outside of ASEAN and then move throughout the ASEAN countries without tariff.

Vietnam has also concluded a large number of trade agreements with other countries, and many of those agreements have an impact on tariff policy and other customs issues.

Irving Seminars & Training presents the practical considerations that businesses need to know in navigating Vietnam's customs procedures and laws. Facilitated by international firms and with the participation of the Vietnamese Customs Department, Vietnam's customs laws have never been clearer.

KEY POINTS

- How to determine the value of imported goods for customs duty purposes?
- AFTA: what's going to happen in 2012 on the commercial, legal and logistic level?
- Duty reduction schedules under free trade agreements: learn how to use them in practice!
- Exemption and suspension of customs duty: practical pitfalls
- Interpreting and applying exemption of customs duty for foreign invested enterprises
- Resolving disputes with the Customs Department
